Context

In Burkina Faso, around 3.4 million people don't have stable access to food, a number that is rapidly increasing. because of the political and secure situation in the country, the cost of basic food products has increased and productivity has decreased due to climate change s and aftereffects of the COVID-19 crisis. To face these challenges, the government has developed an action plan to transform the country's food system into a more sustainable and resilient one. The Confédération Paysanne du Faso (CPF) is a key actor to take this up, having 15 sub-national FO and around 2.4 million individual members. However, CPF needs to increase its capacity to influence effectively the operationalization of this action plan and to guide the government towards an inclusive and sustainable food system that meets the nutritional and food needs of Burkinabe population. Trias will provide advisory services and technical support for CPF to strengthen its capacities and competences in all relevant domains.
